SEMPRAE LABORATORIES FEATURED IN FORBES MAGAZINE

Saddle Brook, NJ, August 2009 – The makers of Zestra®, a safe, patented blend of botanical oils and extracts clinically proven to increase a woman’s feelings of desire and arousal, were the featured entrepreneurs in the August 24, 2009 issue of Forbes magazine.

In “Passion Play,” Forbes reporter Maureen Farrell reveals how Mary Wallace Jaensch and Rachel Braun Scherl of Semprae Laboratories are taking the Zestra brand from bankruptcy to a powerful player in the women’s sexuality market.

The road from bankruptcy to growing business has been challenging, but well worth it, says Jaensch. “We were thrilled that Forbes shared our excitement and enthusiasm for Zestra and its potential. Women are always very interested in talking to us about Zestra; now there are even more people who are aware and talking about Zestra and how well it works for them.”

Indeed, the article even mentions a satisfied Zestra user: “Sewell, N.J. resident Margie Levins is one happy customer. Suffering difficulties from menopause and a recent hysterectomy, the 59-year-old tried Zestra on the advice of her gynecologist. “It brought me back to feeling like I did when I was in my 20s,” says Levins. “I gave it to my friends and got a lot of thank-yous.”

Scherl emphasizes the importance of women talking to women about sexual satisfaction. “If the Forbes article provides women with more confidence that Zestra can increase their sexual satisfaction and motivates them to try, that is a win for everybody.”
